The article has been written by Samantha Collins, who wanted to use this article to bring particular attention to the subject of Empowering Women to Discuss and Manage Urinary Leaks. They feel they may have done this best in the following extract:

'In a world where open conversations about health are becoming increasingly normalized, one surprising and yet prevalent issue remains veiled in silence - urinary leaks among women. Contrary to common assumptions, this is not a rare problem; rather, it affects a substantial percentage of the female population. Despite its widespread occurrence, the societal stigma and taboos surrounding women's urinary health have perpetuated a culture of silence. The reluctance to discuss urinary leaks has far-reaching consequences, contributing to a lack of awareness and understanding of this common issue. As we strive to break free from societal norms that have kept women's health in the shadows, it becomes imperative to acknowledge the widespread
